Tinley Citizens Com. To Open School With Private Funds, Plan

A public mass meeting was held Sunday afternoon in the Tinley Park public school to decide what can be done to solve the paramount question of the day in Tinley as the opening of the local school. The chief object of the meeting was to first of all impress upon the minds of all present the seriousness of the situation and the urgent need for very prompt action to get the school in operation again.

The next point taken up was to decide if the Tinley Park public school can be operated by private funds until state relief is obtained. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Bert Fulton, president of the Tinley Park School Board.

Mr. Fulton outlined the purpose of the meeting and introduced Mr. Floyd L. Hoffman, Sr., of Tinley Park who stressed the seriousness of closing the school and the necessity of self help in connection with its reopening.

Mr. Hoffman outlined a ten point program which was drawn up and approved by a group of citizens, and presented to those present for approval.

After much discussion by several citizens a vote was taken to decide if those present were interested in trying to open the school with private funds until relief could be obtained. The vote was unanimous in favor of re-opening the school with private funds.

Mr. Hoffman was selected chairman of the meeting and the chair was turned over by Mr. Fulton who felt that the meeting should be continued under the auspices of the citizens and not the School Board. The following committee was selected to represent the community:

Wm. Mabey, Fred Hick, George Rowden, Mrs. Albert Felten and Mrs. Edward Henke.

As set forth in the ten point program as outlined by Mr. Hoffman, the purpose of the committee is to work with the school board in devising some means of operating the Tinley Park school the remainder of the term or until assistance is received from the state.

It is estimated about $500 per month will be required to operate the school.

The citizens committee met in a special session with the school board Wednesday night and plans were laid to endeavor to open the school by January 14th. A few more details will have to be taken care of before anything definite can be announced.

The school must be reopened and if it is not it will mean the children will be sent to parochial schools and many families who moved here because Tinley Park had a good school will move back to Chicago or other towns where public schools are in operation. Tinley Park cannot afford to allow its school to remain closed.

The state legislature is being blamed for the predicament the Tinley school is in.

In the course of his address at the mass meeting Sunday, Mr. Hoffman said in part:

"Our school is closed. We are depending upon outside aid for it to be reopened. We may not get that aid. A whole year in the lives of our children is at stake. An entire year may be wasted if we depend upon outside aid and do not get that aid. That year may be lost forever. An irreparable damage and what a tragedy for the children. It is a serious blot upon our records as parents to deprive those who cannot speak for themselves of that which is rightfully due them. It is a serious blot upon us members of a community to sit down and wait for 'George' to come to help us. Even the pilgrims had a school. Certainly we should be able to do as much."

It appears to me that we have a case of confusion of hope with fact. To confuse hope with fact is a natural human trait. About 98 per cent of all commercial failures are due to the confusion of hope with fact. We are here this afternoon to distinguish between what is hope and what is fact.

"We feel that morally the State Legislature is to blame for our predicament and that morally they should help us, but will they help us?"

New Ford Attracts Much Attention

The new Ford car which arrived in Mokena at the Cooper & Hostert Garage and at the Bauch Garage in Frankfort, Saturday morning, drew a lot of enthusiastic comment from the large number of people who saw the cars on display at the above named garages. The new car is superior to any car the Ford Motor Co., has previously built.

At Orland Park the Orland Motor Sales have had a new 1935 Ford truck on display for nearly two weeks. This truck is a very outstanding product and is receiving much attention from prospective truck buyers.

Read the advs. of the Ford Motor Co., and the Ford dealers in this issue regarding the new Fords.

Call Orland Fire Department When Stoves Exploded

Explosion of a stove at the Kinsman Golf club house last Friday morning, resulted in a hurry call for the Orland Park fire department but before Fire Chief John Helenhouse had time to get ready to answer the call, a second call came that the fire was out. The quick use of a chemical fire extinguisher had put out the fire. Damage was nominal.

The Kinsman Golf club is located west of Orland Park on 143rd st.

Orland Couple Celebrate 25th Wedding Day

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cooper celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary on New Year's Day at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Creer where a number of their friends and relatives gathered to remind them of the occasion and extended their congratulations.

A pleasant evening was spent in singing and playing games after which refreshments were served.

New Lenox Girl Christmas Bride

Miss Della May Robbins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Robbins of New Lenox and Mills Rogers Quinby, of Western Springs, were united in marriage at three o'clock, Christmas afternoon in the parsonage of Ridgewood Baptist church with Rev. L. M. Clark reading the ceremony. The couple was attended by Miss Fay Beddle of Beecher and Earl Robbins, brother of the bride.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Quinby left for Cincinnati, Ohio, where they will reside.

Old Dobbin Out of Race

It used to be that old Dobbin pulled the sled, but in this modern age he has been superseded by the automobile. This fact was brought out this week when Highway Commissioner Emil D. Cappel of Frankfort township pulled a sled loaded with coal with his auto instead of Old Dobbin.

Sled Propelled By Air Plane Propeller

Quite a novel contraption was seen on the streets of Mokena this week when a sled propelled with an air plane propeller driven by a motor cycle engine cruised up and down the front street. The engine and propeller were mounted in the rear of the sled and moved the outfit with several passengers at a pretty good speed.

Former Mokena Pastor Goes To Indiana Church

Rev. E. J. Moritz, former pastor of the St. John Evangelical church in Mokena, has accepted a call from the Evangelical church at Shelbyville, Ind., and is moving his family to that city this week.

Rev. Mr. Moritz resigned as pastor of the Mokena church several months ago and served the church through up to December.

Mokena Garden Club Meets Tuesday

The regular Mokena Garden Club meeting will be held Tuesday, Jan. 8th. All the members are urged to attend.

Tinley Park Legion Aux. Unit

The last regular meeting of the Tinley Park Legion Auxiliary was held on December 28th. The meeting was brought to order promptly at 8 p. m. by our president, Mrs. Albert Felten. There were 29 members who answered the Roll Call which was read by our secretary, Mrs. Frances Rowden.

The committee chairmen made their reports which were brief because of the initiation of two new members and the Unit's Christmas party under the auspices of Mrs. Annie Brandau.

Rehabilitation chairman Mrs. M. West reported on the Christmas eve supper at Orland Park for the convalescent. Six ladies from the Unit went to Orland and prepared and served a complete oyster supper. The Tinley Park Unit has made this visit to Orland Park on Christmas eve for the last three years. The ladies also distributed fruit, candy, nuts, smokes and gifts. The boys were very thankful for a very lovely Christmas Eve.

Community Service chairman Mrs. Mamie Brandau, reported on one of the Times Christmas parties which she attended. She also escorted five Tinley Park boys and girls to this party.

A rug made by one of the patients at Edward Lines Hospital was purchased by our Rehabilitation chairman, Mrs. M. West. The rug was sold for the service fund.

The two new members which were initiated were Mrs. Damerell and Mrs. Pokorney. The Unit is very glad to have them with us and hope they attend all of our meetings.

After the meeting the ladies returned to the basement where refreshments were served and gifts were exchanged. A Christmas tree graced the center of the table. Sandwiches, coffee, Jello and cookies were served. Games were also played. We congratulated Mrs. M. Brandau for a pleasant evening and a well arranged party.

Our next regular meeting will be on January 11th. Let's all attend and start out the New Year with a bang!

Tinley Park Garden Club News

To Every Member of the Tinley Park Garden Club, hearty Christmas Greetings and best wishes for the New Year. May your health and happiness increase and through you may the spirit of the Christmas tide spread good cheer, joy and useful Service to many others.

Jennie L. Klepper,

President

The Tinley Park Garden Club held their meeting at the home of Mrs. Elsie Koehler on Thursday, Dec. 20. The president, Mrs. Klepper opened the meeting with the reading of the Xmas greeting at the head of this article.

After a short business meeting, the Xmas party was in order. A beautiful Xmas tree had a pretty ornament for each member with a number on it. The ladies each took a number for a gift with a corresponding number. Each one received a lovely gift, even the smaller guests.

The hostess also had a game arranged in which the members were given small pieces of irregularly cut paper and paste. They were supposed to make something representing Xmas. Mrs. Klepper received first prize for a church she made. Mrs. Duff, second prize for a point-setta she made.

Mrs. Koehler then served delicious cake, coffee, nuts and candy.

The January meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Fred Goebel on January 17th.

TINLEY LEGION POST DANCE TO AID SCHOOL FUND

Tinley Park Post No. 615 of the American Legion, at their special meeting held last night, volunteered to give a dance on Friday, night, January 11, the entire proceeds of which are to be turned over to the Citizen's committee, for the operation of the school.

This offering of the dance, was accepted by the Committee, pending a meeting with the personal of the school staff on Saturday. If this meeting results favorably, the Committee plans to ask all other organizations in town, to follow the lead taken by the Legion in this worthy cause.

John E. Wakeley, forty-two, principal of Danville high school since 1930, died in Lake View hospital, Danville.

James Tuchi, fifty-three, coal miner, was killed by falling slate in mine No. 10 of the Indiana and Illinois Coal corporation at Nokomis.

Rolla Holland, eighty-three, retired farmer, stock raiser, and banker, died in Marion. Mr. Holland is survived by two sons and one daughter.

Frank Berzinski, forty-four, Benton miner, was killed by an automobile driven by Dale Johnson, Taylorville, while attempting to cross a street.

One man was killed and another was seriously injured when an explosion and fire wrecked a tavern near Collinsville. Neither of the men was identified. The tavern was closed at the time of the blast.

Despondent over the threatened loss of his home, Joseph Clzmark, fifty-four years old, Chicago Heights, shot and killed himself in the kitchen of his home. He was a watchman for the Inland Steel company.

Maj. Gen. Frank R. McCoy, youngest major general in the United States army, was ordered by the War department to take command of the Sixth corps area, with headquarters in Chicago's new post office building.

Students in a Latin class in Ferry Hall, Lake Forest school for girls, were startled when a carrier pigeon flew in through a partly opened window. Examination of the bird, which was exhausted by a long flight, revealed the inscription "U. S. A.—262" on the leg band.

Edward S. Todd, seventy years old, former president of the Illinois Lumber Dealers' association, died at Aurora, where he had been engaged in the lumber business for 50 years. Mr. Todd was long interested in blooded live stock and was instrumental in founding the Central States Fair and Exposition.

Henry Swanson of Geneva, county seat of Kane county, was notified of his appointment as acting postmaster of Geneva, effective January 12. The present postmaster, Benjamin A. Miller, will become first assistant postmaster. Swanson has been a member of the Kane county Democratic central committee for 25 years.

Secretary of War Dorn reported to President Roosevelt that an immediate congressional appropriation of $8,000,000 was necessary for the erection of two dams and locks in the Illinois river. One would be built at Peoria, while the second, a replacement, would be erected at LaGrange, Brown county, south of Beardstown.

Two antlered bucks staged a vicious battle in a forest preserve southeast of Rockford. Witnesses said the younger entry, about three years old, drove off his adversary, about six, after an hour of tussling. Residents near the preserve said it was the first recent indication of the presence of wild deer in any numbers.

Secretary of the Interior Ickes announced the cancellation of five loan and grant allotments for non-federal construction projects in Illinois. The five projects were to have cost almost $2,000,000. The largest of the rescinded projects was the loan and grant of $1,790,000 to the city of Joliet for improvements in the water system, canceled because the city has not executed the bond contract and grant agreement sent out from Washington July 24.

Howard L. Scott, postmaster at Fox Lake for the last 20 years, chairman of the Republican central committee of Lake county, was elected to fill a vacancy as recorder of deeds by the Lake county board of supervisors. He will serve out the two year term of Lewis O. Brockway, who died on Thanksgiving after having held the position since 1900. Mr. Scott was elected over John J. Hogan, town clerk of Waukegan township, by a vote of 17 to 16. He will continue to serve as postmaster of Fox Lake until his successor is named.

The United States Department of Labor has authorized the Illinois emergency relief commission to enroll 3,200 Illinois boys and young men in the Civilian Conservation corps for a three months' period beginning January 1, it was announced by Wilfred S. Reynolds, executive secretary of the commission. These men will replace an equal number who have dropped out of the forest camps since the beginning of the fourth six-month enrollment period on October 1 last. The men accepted during the January enrollment are limited to a three-month term, as the official life of the CCC will terminate on March 31, 1935, unless extended by congressional action. Cook county has been allotted a quota of 1,233. Because of the limited quota allotted to Illinois, it is anticipated that applicants from families now receiving relief will fill all existing vacancies.

Jackson J. Vieira, ninety-four, a veteran of the Civil war, died in Jacksonville. He was the last remaining member of his company in the Civil war.

E. Homer Cooley, seventy-seven years old, died at his home in Aurora, of pneumonia, after an illness of three days. Cooley lived in Aurora for 40 years. YANK YANK EXPLAINS SOME THINGS

WHEN Yank Yank the Nuthatch asked Peter Rabbit if there was anything else he wanted to know, Peter was quite ready for him. "Yes," he retorted promptly, "I want to know how it is that you can walk head first down the trunk of a tree without losing your balance and tumbling off."

Yank Yank chuckled happily. "I discovered a long time ago," he replied, "that the people who get on best in this world are those who make the most of what they have and waste no time wishing they had what other people have. I suppose you have noticed that all the Woodpecker family have stiff tail feathers and use them to brace themselves when they are climbing a tree. They have become so dependent upon them that they don't dare move about on the trunk of a tree without using them. If they want to come down a tree they have to back down."

"Now, Old Mother Nature didn't give me a stiff tail but she gave me a very good pair of feet with three toes in front and one behind and when I was a very little fellow I learned to make the most of those feet. Each foot hooks into the bark. When I come down a tree I simply twist one foot around so that the three front claws of this foot keep me from falling. It toe has a sharp claw. When I go up a tree the three front claws on each

"I Should Say Not," Exclaimed Yank Yank.

Is just as easy for me to go down a tree as to go up and I can go right around the trunk quite as easily and comfortably." Suiting action to the word, Yank Yank ran around the trunk of the apple tree just above Peter's head. When he reappeared Peter had another question ready.

"Do you live altogether on insects and worms and grubs and their eggs?" he asked.

"I should say not," exclaimed Yank Yank. "I like acorns and beech nuts and certain kinds of seeds."

"I don't see how such a little fellow as you can eat such hard things as acorns and beech nuts," protested Peter a little doubtfully.

Yank Yank laughed right out. "Some time when I see you over in the Green Forest I'll show you," said he. "When I find a fat beech nut I take it to a little crack in a tree which will just hold it. Then with this stout bill of mine I crack the shell. It really is quite easy when you know how. Cracking a nut open that way is sometimes called hatching and that is how I come by the name of Nuthatch."

Probabilities Never Wrong

The quotation from Aristotle to the effect that probabilities are never wrong is a translation of the Greek which is practically as follows: "In regard to the confirmation of evidence and the law of probabilities, when a man has no witnesses he can say that the decision should be given in accordance with probabilities and that this is the meaning of the oath according to the best of one's judgment. For . . . probabilities cannot be bribed to deceive and neither can they be convicted of bearing false witness."

have been so late in discovering what to all who understand children is an obvious fact.

The child mind as complex as the adult's? It would be safer to call it more complex. In many lanes of knowledge and thought that are familiar and well charted to the grown-up, the child moves in a constant fog. He has hardly catalogued a thing in his mind when something happens to upset his theory and leave him in the dark about what it is all about. Scarcely have doubts on an important principle of life resolved themselves into definite knowledge, than an adult contradiction in action or speech, an adult hint or patronizing smile, sends him floundering again.

A child has so many ideals, so many hopes, so many wonders and questions on which he forms conclusions which bring disappointments and doubt and disillusion, that he is in a constant labyrinth of thought, up one alley and down the next—usually, it must be said, after some adult who doesn't know where he is going, but doesn't care so much as the child! For the child's very world depends on the answer to these thoughts. The adult's world is formed—and however well or badly he may be adjusted to it, he at least knows what he is up against.

Far be it from me to paint adults as sure of life or ourselves. But there are many things we know, about which the child can only wonder and guess. And about the things that leave us as

Bringing our spirits to enchanted lands,
Winding us 'round with heaven's harmonies.
Not only with her music did she touch
Our hearts with beauty, but her life was such
That art and character were joined,

QUESTION BOX by ED WYNN, The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Can you tell me the origin of the custom of hanging paintings on walls? Yours truly,

ART STUDENT.

Answer: In 612 B. C., there ruled in Egypt a very vain king. He heard of an artist who could paint his picture on canvas. The king wishing to leave behind him, his likeness, ordered the artist to paint his picture. When it was completed the king did not like the painting. He sent his soldiers out to catch the artist but they couldn't find him so the king hung the painting.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have my laundry work done at a Chinese laundry. I went there yesterday and was talking to one of the laundry men about his native country. He told me of the earthquakes and floods they have there. He said that after the last earthquake in China the city of Hong-Kong looked just like "h—l." Do you believe that? Yours truly,

N. QUISITIVE.

Answer: Well, some Chinamen have been in a lot of places.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have a very dear friend who has been acting strangely ever since his wife ran away with an engineer of a railroad train. Now, every time he hears a train whistle he gets nervous and runs away and hides himself. What do you think is wrong with him? Sincerely,

G. WHIZ.

Answer: It is only natural that he should run away. An engineer stole his wife and ran away on a train with her and now when he hears a whistle he hides. Very simple. He's afraid the engineer is bringing his wife back.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Can you tell me what is meant when people say a certain married couple are "unspeakably happy"?

Yours,

O. HIGHO.

Answer: When a married couple are referred to as being "unspeakably happy" it means that they are deaf and dumb.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have been ill for several months and my physician wants to send me to the milk cure in Afghanistan. Please tell me, "Is the milk good there?" Sincerely,

THE CHILD'S MIND AND OURS

THE child's mind is as complex as the adult's.

That pronouncement came out at the recent meeting of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene. Dr. James S. Plant, director of the Newark (N. J.) Juvenile Clinic told the assembled doctors psychiatry has just learned that the child mind is no simpler to understand than the adult mind, and that their failure to realize this may be responsible for the appalling number of delinquent and maladjusted children.

Well—we shouldn't be surprised. Only what a pity that the experts in this field didn't long ago consult a few ordinary mothers, or some teachers who knew their jobs. Had they even paged enough imagination to recall their own childhood, they need not floundering and helpless as the child, we at least know that we cannot know! And we have two weapons which he still lacks, to keep us on our feet in the maze. They are philosophy and a sense of humor.

Lesson for January 6

PETER'S CONVERSION AND CALL

LESSON TEXT—John 1:35-42; Mark 1:14-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.—Mark 1:17.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Why Peter Went With Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter Enrolls in Jesus' School.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Accepting a Great Leader.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Ways of Winning Men to Christ.

For the next three months the lessons center around the apostle Peter. The aim of the lesson committee was to acquaint the members of the Sunday school with the life and writings of Peter.

1. The Conversion of Peter (John 1:35-42).

1. John pointing his disciples to Jesus (vv. 29-34). Through the testimony of John the Baptist his disciples were brought to Jesus.

2. Two of John's disciples follow Jesus (vv. 35-37). As a result of the Baptist's testimony, two of his disciples left him and followed Jesus. One of these disciples was Andrew (v. 40), and presumably the other was John. When the Baptist pointed out Jesus as the Lamb of God, the long-expected Messiah, these disciples sought further acquaintance with Jesus. When they looked upon Jesus, they were induced to follow him.

3. The two disciples abiding with Jesus (vv. 38, 39).

a. Jesus' question (v. 38). When Jesus saw the disciples following, he kindly inquired as to their business.

b. The disciples' reply (v. 39). They answered his question by inquiring as to his dwelling place. Their reply showed their desire to go apart privately where they could open their hearts unto him. He invited them to his place of abode, where they enjoyed sweet fellowship with their Master.

4. Andrew bringing Peter to Jesus (vv. 40-42). The very genius of Christianity is self-propagation. The usual method is to begin with those nearest us, home folks and relatives, and pass out to ever-widening circles. The disciples who enjoyed fellowship with Jesus went at once to tell others of the priceless treasure they had found. This is always true of the real disciple. Andrew bringing his brother Peter is a beautiful example of brotherly affection, expressing itself in bringing him to Christ. When Andrew had witnessed to Peter about Christ he brought him to Jesus where he could enjoy personal intercourse. This was a great piece of work for Andrew, for Peter became one of the pillars of the church.

11. The Call of Peter (Mark 1:14-18).

1. Jesus preaching in Galilee (vv. 14, 15). The growing opposition to Jesus moved him to change from Judea to Galilee. He accepted the fate of John the Baptist as foreshadowing his own death. Observe—

a. What he preached (v. 14). The Gospel of the Kingdom of God, which meant the good news of the near approach of the rule of God as predicted by the prophets.

b. How he preached it (v. 15). (1) The time is fulfilled and the Kingdom of God is at hand.

This meant that the time had now come for the appearance of the Messiah and the establishment of his Kingdom.

(2) Repent. This meant that the people should turn around, change their minds and attitude toward Christ, and accept him as their King.

(3) Believe the Gospel. Then, as now, men needed to believe the Gospel of Christ.

2. Jesus called Peter and Andrew to become fishers of men (vv. 16-18). Jesus called this pair of brothers for service in his Kingdom. It is to be noted that these men had previously been called to be disciples of Christ (John 1:36-42). They are now called to service. Jesus first calls men to him for salvation; those who accept that call have an additional call to service. Note—

a. From what they were called (v. 16). They were called from positions of definite service; they were fishers.

b. To what they were called (v. 17). To be fishers of men. They no doubt had been successful fishers. The qualities which made them good fishermen, namely patience, bravery to face the storm and darkness of the night, and perseverance which led them to toil all night, though no fish were caught, would make them good fishers of men.

c. Their obedience (v. 18). Straightway they forsook their nets and followed him. Obedience meant sacrifice, painful separation, the giving up of all business interests, and the leaving of their father behind.

Short Cut to Happiness

If anyone would tell you the shortest, surest way to all happiness and all perfection, he must tell you to make it a rule to yourself to thank and praise God for everything that happens to you.

Prayer

Perhaps we do not think enough what an effective service prayer is, especially intercessory prayer. We do not believe as we should how it might help those we so vainly would serve.

HOW TO SHOOT

By Bob Nichols

Shooting Editor, Field and Stream

NO MAN can hope to become a very good wingshot if he lays his gun away ten months in the year and takes it out again only when the autumn gunning season rolls around. Especially in his development stage, the hopeful shooter needs practice the year 'round. Much of this practice can be what is termed "dry shooting." That is, mere practice indoors with the gun empty.

"Dry shooting" will materially help you acquire good form and speed in your gun mounting. Keep your gun standing handy in a corner of your room, where you can snatch it up for a few minutes' practice in the evening before you turn in. Keep all shells for the gun under lock and key where children, or grown-ups with children's minds, can't get at them. Never slip shells in your gun in the house. To do so is to invite tragedy!

Grab up your gun for a few minutes each day. Not more than two or three minutes at a time, for practice does you little good if you continue after your arms are fatigued.

Practice mounting the gun to your shoulder. Get so you can do it swiftly but gently. Never jerk it up spasmodically, or bang the butt hard back into your shoulder.

Bring it up smoothly, pointing it instinctively at a spot on the wall paper as it comes up to your face and in to your shoulder, then giving it the finer aiming adjustment just as you pull the trigger. Keep both eyes open and see how gradually it becomes easier and easier to point the gun accurately with the full power of your two-eyed vision. Push your gun stock in close to your face so it won't be necessary to tilt your head too far over to look down the barrel. Your gun butt should rest clear in on your shoulder, clear in to the base of your neck—never out on the arm.

Don't snap your hammers. You may break a firing pin. Put the safety on. You can practice pulling the trigger just about as well this way.

Stand erect as you practice. Not stiffly like a ram-rod, but easily erect. Keep your head erect and your chin down. To tuck in your chin before you mount your gun may prevent you from getting the bad habit of craning your head and neck out over the gun stock when you shoot. Get the habit of keeping your chin tucked in as you bring your gun up and you'll find that your barrels come up into easy alignment much quicker. Mounting your gun with chin tucked in is a simpler movement. Doing it with the chin sticking out results in a compound movement—your gun comes up and your chin comes down. Frequently they do not meet at the same point. Your head may be craned out too far over the stock of the gun. When this awkward strain is introduced, the shooter frequently raises his head an instant before firing and up goes his gun muzzle and he over-shoots.

With your chin tucked snugly in, your face soon learns to assume a fixed shooting position. Face and gun stock no longer try to "find each other in the dark." The hands, having been taught their duty, bring the gun stock up into the accustomed position, where cheek and eyes are all ready waiting to take possession of the finer adjustments of the aim.

Hunters who haven't yet learned to assume correct head position before bringing the gun to shoulder, quite often get a bruised cheek bone. They blame the gun. Usually it isn't the gun's fault at all.

Good shooting form—and good shooting, too—results from a synchronization of movement, and a consequent elimination of unfamiliar movement and lost motion.

"Sensitization Diseases"

Found Largely Inherited

Hay fever, asthma, eczema, food idiosyncrasy and similar minor diseases caused by excessive sensitivity to certain pollens, dusts, foods or other common substances have been found to be inherited family weaknesses in 33 per cent of 7,000 students studied by the University of Michigan Health Service. Probably 54 per cent of all persons have a personal or family history of "sensitization diseases," the survey also showed.

Since 1930, complete medical histories of 7,000 students entering the university have been registered and checked for accuracy by parents of the students, according to Dr. Buenaventura Jimenez in the Michigan Medical Society Journal.

It was found that 12 per cent of these students had previously had hay fever, rose fever, asthma or eczema. A second group, 22 per cent, reported having had urticaria, gastrointestinal upsets, food idiosyncrasy, frequent "colds" and headaches of the type usually caused by sensitization to some substance or food. A third group, 19 per cent reported themselves so far free from such annoyances, but with a history of sensitivity among other members of the family.

"Although the health service figures show a prevalence of sensitization diseases exceeding all previous estimates, they are well attested and emphasize the need of more attention to these conditions which are usually regarded as annoyances rather than diseases," states Doctor Jimenez. "This viewpoint may be justified in youth, for many symptoms are progressive with age."

SOLDIERS KILL TWO IN LYNCHING MOB

Tennessee Town Courthouse Is Destroyed.

Shelbyville, Tenn.—Southern National Guardsmen, with bayonets and bullets, killed two white men here and wounded seven others in a pitched battle fought in and around the courthouse to save the life of a colored youth. He was on trial for assaulting a fourteen-year-old white girl.

When the prisoner was taken from the courthouse disguised in the uniform of a soldier, wearing a gas mask, and the mob learned it had been tricked, the rioting started anew.

Flames and dynamite were used to level the $150,000 Bedford county courthouse. Four trucks used by the Guardsmen were overturned, saturated with gasoline, and burned.

While Gov. Hill McAllister and his aides worked frantically by telephone to mobilize 500 more state troops to occupy the town, groups of men stalked the streets, firing random shots into the air, hurling imprecations against the colored population and Guardsmen alike, and threatening to invade the colored quarter of town with pistol, knife, and club.

When the trial started the courthouse was guarded by 110 militiamen.

The mob surged forward in the first of its three bloody attacks. Gun butts and tear gas bombs were brought into play and the crowd was repulsed. Augmented by more recruits, the crowd, its spirit aroused by the first clash, came forward again.

The first line of Guardsmen yielded and the rioters reached the door of the building. This time dynamiters led the attack and began digging at the foundations of the building to place their explosive, but were driven back.

The third attack hurled the ranks of soldiers backward still farther, and into the courthouse itself. Then the mounted machine guns went into action.

From the doorway they sprayed bullets into the advancing mob. The crowd halted for a moment and, taking advantage of the hesitation, the militiamen charged, resorting to their bayonets.

When the battle had ceased Raleigh Edwards, thirty years old, a house painter, and an unidentified white man were dead, bayoneted through the stomach.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS

A demand for more teeth in the new NRA, empowering it to force reluctant industries into line in a drive for "economic democracy," is voiced by the recovery unit's labor advisory board, headed by William Green.

The United States Supreme court agreed to review the railway retirement act, a piece of New Deal legislation that recently was held unconstitutional by the District of Columbia Supreme court.

An unemployment insurance system resting upon contributions by employers through a pay roll tax was approved by President Roosevelt's economic security advisory committee.

Prof. Jacob Viner, economic assistant to Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, resigned and will return to his teaching duties at the University of Chicago.

President Roosevelt appointed Julius G. Lay of Washington, D. C., to be minister to Uruguay.

Dern Asks Larger Army, $60,000,000 for Buildings

Washington.—A new War department building in Washington and a $60,000,000 housing program to remedy "deplorable conditions" in army living quarters were recommended in the annual report of George Dern, secretary of war.

He also asked that the army's strength be raised from 11,750 officers and 117,517 men to 14,000 officers and 165,000 men.

Defending the army air corps' record in flying the mail last winter, he said most of the criticism was "uninformed," though there was justification for some. Most of the defects which came to light, he said, were due to insufficient money.

Princess Barbara Gives $5,000 to Needy

New York.—A real-life princess, Barbara Hutton Mdivani, stepped out of her story-book existence to assure a merry Christmas for 10,000 needy.

In response to an open letter from Ed Sullivan, Broadway columnist—a letter that made her cry—she contributed a $5,000 check for a "Princess Barbara Christmas dinner" for New York's poor children and their parents.

Mother Shoots Girl and Ends Own Life

Fresno, Calif.—Miss Frances G. Hughett, eighteen, was shot and critically wounded here by her mother, Mrs. Gertrude M. Hughett, who then killed herself.

Deputy Sheriff Slain

Beckley, W. Va.—Shot twice, his throat cut and his face battered beyond recognition, the body of Deputy Sheriff Leamon Martin was found near his wrecked car.

Washington.—Time after time since President Roosevelt entered the White

Again at Crossroads

House, many observers have insisted that he had reached a crossroads and that on those occasions he necessarily had to choose between the right and the left. They contended with considerable justification that he either had to be conservative or radical. But somehow the President arranged to follow both roads at once. At least that conclusion has been reached by those who classify themselves as liberals.

Now, observers are saying again that the President has reached the crossroads and must choose between the right and the left. With the convening of congress there has come forward the usual number—perhaps I should say more than the usual number—of proposals for radical or conservative legislation as the case may be. There are dozens, almost hundreds, of bills advocating nostrums and crackpot ideas which cannot possibly do more than take up time and keep the government printing office busy at the expense of the taxpayers in printing the bills themselves. There are in all of this mess as well many pieces of worthwhile legislation as well as the proposals bearing earmarks of drafting under White House guidance.

In addition there are close to six dozen presidential appointments upon which the senate must act. Some of these names are of individuals of known radical tendencies. Some others are recognized as equally conservative. It will be the senate's job to pass upon these nominations which, some observers insist, represent perhaps the widest variation in economic views that has ever been sent to the Capitol for confirmation of appointment.

As a corollary to this confused state, there are the growing differences of opinion, based on presidential policy proposals, as to whether the government should attempt to provide relief through work as Mr. Roosevelt desires or should turn to a plain, unadulterated dole. There is the demand from the White House for legislation putting the federal government further into competition with business by expansion of publicly owned power facilities and the question of liquidating or continuing to expand such programs as that of loans to home owners and extension of NRA.

Summed up, it would appear, superficially at least, that Mr. Roosevelt is definitely at the crossroads. I am told by legislative leaders, however, that the administration program thus far advanced again does not commit Mr. Roosevelt definitely to follow either the radical or conservative pathways. They point out that there is an unusual admixture of two schools of economic thought represented in legislation bearing presidential approval and their thought seemed to be that Mr. Roosevelt will avoid being forced into either camp at this time.

It has been most interesting to observe the fluctuation of temperature among the various New Dealers. Prior to the last election they were very low in spirit. Many of them were saying, in private at least, that Mr. Roosevelt was getting out of hand as far as they were concerned and was turning certainly toward the conservative school of thought. At the same time among conservative members of the administration and in congress and to a considerable extent among business leaders, there was a growing feeling that they had witnessed the phenomena of having their own ears pinned back just when they thought they were on the upgrade.

Following this change of trends, along comes the mass of White House legislation, some of which pleases the New Dealers and some of which pleases the conservatives. Each finds fault with that portion of the program that is reasonably satisfactory to the other. This contrariety of opinion extends into the ranks of members of the house and senate. Consequently, the question to which the observers are now seeking an answer is whether Majority Leader Robinson in the senate and the Democratic wheel-horses in the house are going to be able to keep their tremendous numbers in line. Thus far, there has been no word from the majority leaders either in the house or the senate indicating any doubt on their part that the administration whip will fail to drive recalcitrant members into the proper alleys. Unbiased observers are taking the position, however, that time alone will tell. And it may be added with some emphasis that if the wild horses break loose from the hitching post once, the current session of congress may provide more action than results.

Present plans of the Republican leadership, if there are enough Republicans left to make their presence felt, indicate that the Democratic commanders need not expect any help from that quarter in pulling hot chestnuts out of the fire. For example, I understand that the soldiers' bonus question will be used by the Republicans as a sort of prod with which to disturb the majority party. It seems definite that the house and senate will pass legislation for immediate payment of the bonus. It may not be a program for full payment of the sum that is not due until 1945, but the pressure is so strong that some action will be forthcoming.

If Mr. Roosevelt sticks to his guns and vetoes any bonus legislation excepting that proposing to care for the destitute ex-soldiers, sailors and marines, there is enough strength in congress to pass the legislation over his veto. The soldiers' lobby is strong; of that there can be no doubt. The members will be thinking of their political future, not Mr. Roosevelt's, when the question is put before them. Then is when the Republican minority could be of distinct help to the administration but, apparently, that is just the thing the Republican minority is not going to do.

The administration is now examining various avenues of a possible compromise on the bonus payments and it is through this course that a hope exists on the part of administration leaders to avoid the showdown mentioned above. Knowing that it cannot count on the Republican minority for any help to carry through its plans, the administration may make some concessions to the bonus advocates. These most certainly will be made unless a count of noses by the leadership shows a little later that the supporters of a full bonus payment can be whipped—and right now that is generally considered by observers as being impossible.

Here again the views of radicals and conservatives clash. There will be some radicals supporting the bonus payment in order to force the President into a position where he must inflate the currency further. That group thinks inflation of the currency will boost prices and provide the necessary hypodermic injection to get us out of the depression. Opposed to these are a considerable number of house and senate members who fear inflation and its results like they fear the poison fangs of a rattlesnake. So, when the bonus question is joined as an issue it seems to me we will see an interesting exposition of how politics makes strange bedfellows.

President Roosevelt is about to open up the federal treasury for loans to cities to provide funds for construction of municipal light and power plants. He has announced definitely that he favors this procedure and, therefore, in effect has invited cities to join the march on Washington for more federal loans.

The newest development in the administration program of loaning money here and there seems to have resulted in repercussions of a more important nature than objections voiced to other types of federal loans. Here in Washington considerable discussion has developed as to the wisdom of this policy and this has been followed by speculation as to the ultimate end of a program of this kind. Opinion throughout the country apparently has not been definitely crystallized yet but from all indications it appears we are due to hear much debate on the newest New Deal idea.

Objectors to the program of providing loans to cities for construction of municipal light and power plants insist that Mr. Roosevelt has taken the longest step toward state socialism thus far to be made a part of his New Deal. They contend that Mr. Roosevelt has gone beyond his recovery program and has embarked upon a plan representing part and parcel of his scheme for public ownership of all industries impressed with a public interest through service of a monopolistic character.

Opponents also argue that the President is placing privately owned industries under a severe handicap by forcing them to compete with what should be private industry but what actually is their own government.

In some quarters also I hear expressions of a fear that if any substantial number of cities borrow federal money to build their own light and power plants, the federal government will have expanded to that extent its domination over those cities. Through loans to banks, to agriculture and to many other lines, federal influence daily is being exerted upon the private life of the country until, some observers declare, states, counties and municipalities are gradually sinking into oblivion insofar as their own self-government is concerned.

On the other hand, such advocates of public ownership as Senator Norris of Nebraska, are elated over Mr. Roosevelt's decision to proceed along public ownership lines. Senator Norris believes Mr. Roosevelt has authority now under public works and recovery act provisions to promote publicly owned light and power plants about any place he pleases. The Nebraska senator, it will be remembered, was the spearhead of the movement that resulted in creation of the Tennessee Valley authority and the program for development of electrical energy from the Muscle Shoals dams in the Tennessee river. Already, privately owned light and power companies in many sections contiguous to the Tennessee river plant have been virtually forced to sell their properties to the TVA.

Married Prince Probably Like Rest of "Hubbies"

"Oh to be in her shoes for just a little while—I'd give half my life for it! To be marrying the son of the king of England! To be the sister-in-law of the prince of Wales. To have all the crowned heads of Europe at your wedding and for the rest of your life call them 'cousin.' To be 'one of the family' in little old Buckingham palace, to eat breakfast with them, and see them in negligee.

"But most important is the husband she's getting—a prince right out of a fairy tale. Young, tall and handsome enough to take your breath away, with the bluest blood in the world written all over him in manliness and charm. Just look at his picture and imagine the life-long thrill and romance of having him for a husband. What it must be like!"

Commenting on the foregoing, from a very human standpoint, a widely read contributor to these columns reflects as follows: "A young girl said that to me on the day of the marriage of the Greek Princess Marina to the duke of Kent. And doubtless thousands of other girls were saying it to themselves. Perhaps, too, a few married women who looked at the picture of the bridegroom—and felt sorry for themselves.

"What it must be like to be married to him!"

"Well, with the gilded coaches back in the stables and the last royal guests gone home to ward off their own revolutions, with the tons of gold and silver wedding gifts locked up in the storeroom—in short with all the shouting over—it's probably like being married to any other man.

Chew for Beauty, Models Advised

Rhythmic chewing, combined with exercises of the head and neck, was revealed recently at New York to 2,000 models, members of the Models' Guild, as the newest beauty formula. The advice came from a well-known specialist in response to a request from the guild for information regarding the system.

A dozen exercises are included in the complete routine. The instructions for the one illustrated: "Start with chewing gum—one or two sticks. After a few seconds, begin the exercise by tossing the head from side to side. Then open your mouth as wide as you can. Close it gradually, and all the while endeavor to chew your gum."

This exercise is designed to tone the muscles of the chin and lower jaw. Others promote a fine neckline and beautiful cheeks.

"By now the princess will be busy getting used to her new relations—only she'll have to pay more attention than most to her mother-in-law. It's about time, too, for her to getting down to the serious business of housekeeping—and some one said twenty servants can be twenty times the worry of one.

"But it's her man in whom we are interested—and how it must feel to be married to him, her fairy-tale prince.

"Come to think of it, most women married fairy-tale princes—and came back to earth by pretty much the same route. There's that gradual dissolving of the spell, and getting used to the particular quirks and whims of a flesh-and-blood man.

"Probably the king's son will react no differently than any well-bred young man to getting his bacon burnt or having his wife keep him waiting. Being a British prince he will doubtless restrain himself, but she will know how he feels about it, just the same.

"They'll have to talk about bills—oh, yes, fifty thousand a year is not very different from five when there are problems about the children, and why can't they go to the Mediterranean instead of the cold and wind of Scotland. Again, being a Britisher, he'll probably spare her bad temper and the scenes she might experience with the bluest blood of a country further south on the map. But there's a way of freezing that has driven more women to drink or its equivalent than the most violent rages of violent men. She's very pretty, and he'll be jealous, and, of course, women will always adore him. Oh, we don't know what form this bride's trouble will take, but they'll come along—for there is no Santa Claus for a grown-up wife, even when she marries a fairy-tale prince.

"Don't mistake our meaning. That prince looks like a darling, all right—but just how romantic it will be to be married to him depends on precisely the same breaks that fall to the lot of any girl—that is, on how much of a darling he really is; not on the fact that he is rich, tall and handsome and the brother of the prince of Wales."

Chinese Good Wishes

Conveyed by Symbols

From the earliest times, fish have played an important part in Chinese life and art, and in the Book of Odes we find constant references to them. The homonym of fish is "abundance," and it is a symbol of power and rank. They are among the charms given to keep away demons and evil spirits.

The homonym of eagle is "heroic," so that the picture of an eagle on a rock is a symbol of heroism and of tense and vigorous life. The wild goose and the duck are symbols of conjugal fidelity, and mutual assistance, so pairs of earthenware or porcelain ducks are favorite wedding presents.

A white or golden pheasant on a scroll is an allusion to a council hall in the Han Lin academy, and thus the symbol expresses the wish that the recipient may have happiness, longevity and official preferment. The crane is a bird of good augury, and only surpassed by the phoenix. It is the aerial steed of the immortals, for it was a crane which carried Emperor Wang to the celestial world, so the gift of a crane scroll signifies a wish of permanent health.

PROFITEER'S TREACHERY

If The United States were to be drawn into another war inadequately prepared and without a Universal Draft law, billions of dollars would be squandered and certain interests would "clean up".

With that thought some lobbyist in Washington, in registering opposition to The American Legion's Universal Draft proposal, are adroitly trying to block our national defense suggestions.

Without adequate defense, thousands, possibly millions, of brave but untrained lads would be sacrificed and millions of dollars of the comparatively meager funds of the masses would be wasted. War may come in spite of anything we may do for peace, and if we can't assure our people we shall never go to war, it is our duty to assure an even chance to those who would have to fight. We must do that against opposition from any source, the most reprehensible of which is the feudal lords of finance, who would make serfs of our defenders.

NO BLUNDERS, NO REGRETS

"Youth is blunder, manhood is struggle, old age is regret," wrote Disraeli many years ago. The regrets of old age bear relation to the blunders of youth. The American Legion celebrated its fifteenth birthday this year; it is still young.

So far, it has no apologies to make, in spite of the assertions of Clarence Wilson, Katherine Mayo, W. Russell Bowie, Economy League and other self-styled "protectors of treasures"—notwithstanding the remarks of those who are reluctant to admit that Right is Right.

The fact that the Legion from its earliest days had to struggle on behalf of the disabled veterans, whom it had sworn to protect, and for the rights of the dependents of veterans, together with its unequalled service to the community, State and nation, accounts for the absence of mistakes. Busy, altruistic youth has no time for blunders. The American Legion inherited the struggles of manhood in its cradle days; we may hope and believe therefore that an IMPARTIAL history of our organization will contain no blunders and no regrets, when the bugler has blown Taps over the grave of the last American Legionnaire.—Stamford (Connecticut) Legionnaire.

A road show was making a tour of one night stands, and had arrived in a little town billed to play "Romeo and Juliet" at the local opera house. Shortly after the troupe got in town the leading man approached the manager with a look of great distress. "I must have ten cents," he implored.

"Ten cents!" shouted the manager. "I never saw such a fellow—always howling for money. What do you need money for in this town?"

"I must have a shave," the actor explained. "You can't expect a fellow to play Romeo with a three-days growth of beard."

The manager thought for a moment, and put his hand in his pocket. Then a happy smile broke over his face, and his hand came out of his pocket empty. "That's all right," he declared. "We'll just charge the bill to Othello."

Uncle Ben, the village drayman, was on the witness stand.

"What's your name?" asked the lawyer.

"Benjamin Franklin Finney, suh."

"Can you sign it?"

"What dat?"

"Can you write your name?"

thundered the legal light, determined to prove that the old fellow knew rather less than nothing.

"Well, you see it this way," Uncle Ben hesitated. "I never writes myself—I always dictates, suh."

TINLEY CITIZENS COM. SEEKS TO REOPEN SCHOOL

"In speaking with our County School Supt., Mr. Aiken said the other day that he approved any method of keeping our schools open by private contributions and subscriptions if at all possible to do so. In fact, Mr. Aiken encouraged such action for the sake of the children who are the real sufferers in this dilemma. He believes as I do that a community which actually tries to help itself will be seen in a much more favorable light when its plea is presented to the legislature."

"In connection with our school difficulties, let us all set for our selves the task of keeping our school open. It is your job and mine as much as that of the School Board or as much as that of anyone else residing in this community. It is our job—let us do it."

"As to real estate values, if any, how will the closing of this school affect them? Let me answer that question by asking another. Would you, if you were looking for a home as an outsider, consider a purchase of property in a community that was without public school facilities and regular school terms? I do not think you would. Our real estate owners if they expect a market for their holdings can afford to contribute substantially to the maintenance of an uninterrupted school term, especially during this period of waiting for aid from outside sources. With my limited acquaintance here in Tinley, I know of at least a half a dozen families who are renting and sending their children to this school. I am one. You who are better acquainted perhaps know of many more families that are doing the same. Do not these families bring to this community substantial revenues? Could this community afford to lose the money these people spend among the local merchants and the rent that they pay to the owner which permits the landlord in turn to pay his real estate taxes? I don't believe that this community can afford to lose them. Neither can this community reasonably expect such a family with children in it to remain if the school remains closed. Could you blame them for moving when Maywood is so near to us and in fine financial condition with their teachers paid in cash right up to date and with a large surplus of cash in their treasury? I understand too, that Lombard, Brookfield, LaGrange, Elmhurst and Flossmoor are in excellent financial condition. Even our next door neighbor, New Lenox is in good financial condition. I understand. As I said before, I am not the one to dodge an issue just because it is a difficult one and to run out and leave the rest of the community to hold the bag. I don't think that would be fair until we have tried every means at our command to re-open and to keep this school open."

"Several ideas have occurred to me by which we might finance the costs of maintaining an uninterrupted school term while we are waiting for the hoped for charity funds. Some of these ideas may not be 'so hot' but, if we get enough ideas and enthusiasm we will find ways and means to care for our own here in Tinley. The merchants, rather than make an outright contribution would perhaps prefer to voluntarily raise the prices on their goods another 2 per cent or an amount equal to the present sales taxes. Then when the merchants pay their sales taxes they could issue a check for a like amount to be used for school purposes. The merchants might lose some business by voluntarily increasing their prices by this amount, but could we not put on a "buy at home" program which would more than compensate them for the business that they might lose on account of their efforts to assist our community? I am sure my family does not spend all that it might with our local merchants and perhaps many others do the same because Chicago, Blue Island, Harvey and Chicago Heights are so near to us. I believe the merchants and business men will of themselves get together and work out some scheme to aid us that is agreeable to them if we in return will sponsor this buy at home program. The ladies might provide suet, tapers, dances, card parties, home talent plays and so on down the line if they sensed an earnest effort to keep our school open. I have never heard of the ladies taking a back seat when the cause was worthy. The American Legion is outstanding in its efforts to assist its community when in distress. That is one of their cardinal principles. Should the Legion be called upon for assistance in the event that you folks are sincere ly and earnestly interested in keeping the school going somehow, some way, I'll bet that they would come forward with more ideas of how to raise the money to do this job than Carter has pills or Mr. Funk and Mr. Vogt have beans. There are many other organizations in town that I understand are just as anxious and willing to back any worthy movement. Is there a more worthy cause than that of providing for the youngsters?"

Following Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Clarence Welscher from the County Superintendent of schools office was introduced. He told the assembly what could be expected in the way of relief, and exhorted all citizens to cooperate with their school board. He advised them to write their state representatives urging them to support a bill giving immediate assistance to the School Districts in distress.

There is a general sentiment that it is up to every citizen, if he or she feels they are worthy of being called an American Citizen, to get behind this newly created committee (whether or not they have children of school age at present), and support whatever plan they adopt in endeavoring to open the Tinley Park public school for those children's sake who are not old enough to speak for themselves, but who depend upon the older folks to see that they get what they are entitled to—an education.

TINLEY PARK JUNIOR GARDEN CLUB

Cards were sent to the buds to meet at the market at 1:15 p. m. Friday, December 28.

Mrs. Rogers called for the buds and escorted them to my home, this was a surprise because they thought the Christmas party was to be held in Mrs. Funk's basement.

We were very pleased to have Mrs. Funk and Mrs. Nielsen with us. Mrs. Nielsen helped in Mrs. Funk's place because she wasn't so well.

Ten buds were present and after greetings were extended to all, Irma Hick took charge of the regular meeting.

When the meeting was adjourned Mrs. Rogers had a short study period describing interesting facts about the holly, mistletoe and the poinsettia.

The poinsettia has been known since 1835. Then Irma was told to light the Christmas after which lovely Christmas poems were read by all those present.

Dorothy Campbell told a lovely Christmas story. Little Betty Brunner sang a song. In her poem Velma Lorenz told about a "mizzable" little mouse who ate the cake she wanted Santa Claus to have.

These were all enjoyed so much. Then the lights in the dining-room were lighted and the buds were escorted to the table the center of which was a snow scene with Santa Claus going down a chimney and eleven little Santa Claus ladies standing around a pond of ice.

At the other end a small Christmas tree stood with eight lights.

Each bud received a red paper cup filled with candy.

Jelly and peanut butter sandwiches, cookies, and cocoa was served. Green paper napkins and little green New Year's bells were at each place.

Then a little red chimney filled with tiny lollypops was passed and each bud found a number on hers to correspond with the gift she was to receive.

The buds were delighted in their exchange of gifts.

Then brown paper bags were given out and the buds were told to form in line and one of the little Santa Claus ladies danced into each little bag for the buds to take home.

Then Happy New Year Greetings and goodbyes were said and the little folks skipped along over the snow to their homes.

No Garden Club meetings will be held during the next few winter months.

The Elmore Poultry Co., who are selling tree ripened oranges and fruit direct from Florida, have had very good sales during the holiday season.

Mrs. John E. Swisher who has been confined to bed by injuries sustained in a recent fall, is improving nicely.

The Tinley Park Royal Neighbors will hold their monthly meeting at the Community Hall next Tuesday.

Mrs. Brodthun who has been seriously ill in the home of her daughter, Mrs. George Hopman, remains about the same.

Work on the new feed store of the Cook-Lake Feed Co., has been held up by inclement weather, but work was again resumed this week.

THE NEW FORD V-8 FOR 1935

NOW ON DISPLAY

A New Ford V-8 That Brings New Beauty, New Safety, and a New Kind of Riding Comfort Within Reach of Millions of People

The New Ford V-8 for 1935 is the biggest and roomiest Ford car ever built. It is a strikingly handsome car, with modern lines and new, luxurious appointments.

But most important of all it is especially designed to give you smooth, easy riding over all kinds of roads—"a front-seat ride for back-seat riders."

This ease of riding is achieved by the use of three basic principles never before combined in a low-price car.

1. Correct distribution of car weight by moving engine and body forward eight and a half inches.

2. New location of seats by which the rear seat is moved forward, toward the center of the car—away from the rear axle and away from the bumps.

3. New spring suspension which permits the use of longer, more flexible springs and increases the springbase to 123 inches.

The result is Center-Poise—which not only gives you a new riding comfort but adds to the stability of the car and its ease of handling. You can take curves with greater safety.

There are many new features in the Ford V-8 for 1935 which make the car still easier to drive. New brakes give more power for stopping quickly with far less foot pressure on the pedal.

A new type of easy-pressure clutch employs centrifugal force to increase efficiency at higher speeds. New steering mechanism makes the car still easier to handle. New, wider, roomier seats.

The New Ford V-8 for 1935 retains the V-8 engine which has demonstrated its dependability and economy in the service of more than a million owners. There are refinements, but no change in basic design. You buy premium performance when you buy this Ford V-8—full 85 horsepower and capable of 80 miles an hour. All Ford V-8 cars for 1935 come equipped with Safety Glass throughout at no additional cost.

We invite you to see this New Ford V-8 for 1935 at the showrooms of Ford dealers. You will want to ride in it—to drive it yourself. You will find it a new experience in motoring.

BITS OF THE NEWS

T. Y. O.

The Tinley Youths Organization held its regular meeting December 26, at the residence of Henry Boldt. At this meeting a committee was picked by the president to formulate plans for a roller skating party to be held in the near future. At the end of the meeting entertainment was given in the form of an initiation of three of the new members. Now as you may remember it was a very cold evening last Wednesday, and the boys did not carry out their task well enough to please the initiation committee so the initiation was postponed until next meeting.

Come on you boys we're still looking for new members, so don't forget our meetings every Wednesday eve at 7:30.

More News!! A certain couple of boy friends and decided to go out one Saturday night with a couple of girls, but it seems that one of the boys failed to show up at the appointed time and meeting place—Wonder why?

It seems that our vice-president who has that "Airflow" ran into a little trouble one day. It happened that the streamlined vehicle in which he travels about froze up and began to boil, so what does the man do but hop out put some snow in the radiator to cool it off—That's using the old bean. Well until next time.

Better Breakfasts

AN apple a day keeps the doctor away, according to the modern saying, in spite of the Biblical ban on apples that got Adam and Eve into so much trouble. Modern housewives know, too, that plenty of fruit for breakfast bears fruit in a better day. So here is a breakfast that begins with delicious grapefruit halves, proceeds from there to apple pancakes with maple syrup, adds a tempting tang with tasty, crisp curls of bacon, and has the full flavor of strictly fresh coffee pervading the whole.

Of course you know how to prepare the grapefruit halves, and cook the bacon so that it will have just the right coquettish curl, and here is the way to make the evaporated milk. Sift together one and one-fourth cups flour, one and a half teaspoons baking powder, one and a half tablespoons sugar and one-fourth teaspoon salt, and add together with three tablespoons melted butter. Stir in two-thirds cup finely chopped tart apples, and bake on a hot griddle. Serve with maple syrup. This makes about twenty cakes.

Fresh Coffee

And the coffee! To be sure it is strictly fresh, just go into any grocery store and select one of the brands that are marked "vacuum packed." Coffee packed this way always remains as fresh as when it was put into the can, and you are sure to be able to find a blend that appeals to your palate among the many brands that are now packed in this manner.

DIET AND EXERCISE MAKE FOR BEAUTY

NOWHERE in the world, perhaps, will be found gathered together so many beautiful women and handsome men as in the movie colony at Hollywood. But it is no secret that many of these persons were not considered beautiful before entering pictures. By studying their good and poor features, and then by careful dieting, exercise, medical treatment, make-up, and proper attire, they have gained for themselves the beauty the screen portrays.

While being beautiful is not so essential to the work of the average person, careful grooming and attractiveness are playing increasingly important parts in the lives of most people, both in the business world and socially.

A firm, slender body vibrant with good health, lustrous, well arranged hair, sparkling teeth, well cared for hands and nails, and clear eyes and complexion are assets to every man or woman regardless of his position in life. A few moments spent in planning for oneself an adequate diet and schedule of exercise, then faithfully following those plans, will bring out hidden marks of beauty in most anyone, in addition to increasing the general health of an individual. An adequate diet should contain plenty of fruits, at least two vegetables (one yellow or green), and a quart of milk each day in addition to the other foods in the diet.

Out of the Fountain of Youth

WELL PLANNED DIET AIDS FAMILY HEALTH

THERE is no such thing as a forty hour week for mothers; they must be on the job every hour of every day, looking after the welfare of their families. Especially during the winter time when it is so easy for young folks, and grown-ups, too, to catch cold, it is doubly important that mother be constantly alert to guard against disease.

In addition to seeing that each member of the family is provided with warm clothing for indoors and out, it is part of mother's work to see that her family is adequately fed, not only their tummies filled, but food provided for proper nutrition and growth of bones and teeth.

All of this work doesn't leave her with very much time to take care of herself or do the many things that she enjoys doing. However, with a little careful planning it is quite easy to arrange a balanced daily diet that will include as much fruit as possible, two vegetables (one green or yellow leafy variety), and a quart of milk for each child. These foods and the observance of a few simple health rules such as daily brushing of the teeth, frequent bathing, out of door exercise in the sunlight, and plenty of sleep in a room with open windows will do much toward keeping the family in good health throughout the year. And Mother will find that a healthy family will mean less worry and much more leisure time for herself.

Helpful Suggestions for Variety in Home Packed Lunches

Boxed lunches for the school child can easily be made more palatable by the inclusion of fresh or stewed fruits, cooked vegetables and fresh pasteurized milk.

A TRUE boomerang in many mothers' lives is the problem of the school lunch to be packed each morning. Anyone who has to plan the menus for a family realizes that monotony will in a short time make meal preparation and eating chores rather than the pleasures they might be.

Until quite recently home packed lunches consisted in the main of several heavy meat sandwiches, a few cookies or a piece of cake, and perhaps an apple. Of late, however, nutritionists have carried on a strenuous campaign to show the public to what extent food is responsible for general health conditions and how luncheons of light, appetizing, yet energy building foods would eliminate that feeling of drowsiness and lethargy so frequently experienced following the noon meal.

To secure variety is still a problem that confronts many mothers, especially those who have rapidly growing sons and daughters who seem never to get enough to eat. Here are a few suggestions that might prove of value. Instead of discarding the small jars with screw caps in which salad dressing, cheeses, relishes, or jellies are sold, save them to be used in packing cream soups, custards, cottage cheese, souffles, fresh tomatoes, preserved fruits, etc., into the school lunch box. Wax paper and the brightly colored paper napkins which can be purchased at a nominal cost add greatly to the appeal of a boxed lunch. Use colored cellophane from candy boxes and packages to wrap fruits. Several pieces of fruit instead of so many starchy foods will make the luncheon taste better and "sit" better.

As a general rule fresh pasteurized milk in small bottles can be purchased at any school, even though there may be no cafeteria in the building. If one feels that a child is not getting the milk at the school, a good plan is to include it in the lunch box. Milk is so essential for the vitamins, minerals and energy-building elements that the body requires that no child should be allowed to go without it. Given below are a few simple ways of varying the daily supply of milk.

EGG NOG: 1 egg, 1 teaspoon sugar, pinch of salt, 3/4 glass of milk, sprinkling of cinnamon or nutmeg, few drops of vanilla; beat the egg well, add other ingredients, mix and chill thoroughly before serving. If a frothy egg nog is desired, the white of the egg may be beaten separately and folded in last.

FRUIT MILK: To a glass of chilled milk add two to three tablespoons of juice from canned cherries, raspberries, or strawberries.

GINGER MILK PUNCH: 1 egg, 1 tablespoon sugar, 1/4 teaspoon of salt, 1/2 tablespoon ginger, 3/4 cup milk, nutmeg to taste; beat yolk, then add sugar, ginger and salt and mix well. Add milk, pour over the stiffly beaten egg white. Dust with nutmeg, chill well.

Chocolate, honey, corn sirup, maple sirup, almond or vanilla flavoring may be mixed with fresh pasteurized milk as a means of enticing a jaded appetite.

Help to Utilize Excess Food by Canning, Pickling

By WALTER W. McLAUGHLIN

Director, Illinois Department of Agriculture

ONE of the most deplorable things about the period we have just been going through is that food has been going to waste while people went hungry. One way to remedy this situation is for individuals to store away this excess food for such time as it is needed—by canning and preserving.

Fortunately, some of our Illinois foods do not need any special attention to preserve them. Milk, of course, is supplied fresh every day, so there is no need to preserve it and the dependable apple and potato will both keep in storage. But grapes, peaches and corn must be preserved or canned. Of course apples, too, can be preserved—in the form of jelly, apple butter and so on.

Grape juice is one of the most attractive ways of conserving grapes.

Although this drink has long been recognized for its pleasing taste, it was only comparatively recently that it was found to be of value in preventing acidosis—a quality which had previously been credited chiefly to the citric fruits. Preserves and conserves are other forms in which grapes are particularly appetizing.

Although fresh foods are usually considered superior to the canned in flavor, they are not always. To cite one example—peach pickle is a delicacy on any table. And if care is taken in the cooking process the canned foods will have approximately the same food value as the fresh.

Save the Vitamins.

In canning any one of these three foods—peaches, grapes or corn—care should be taken to avoid oxidation and over-cooking as this is destructive to the Vitamins A and C, one or both of which is present in good quantities in each of these foods and should not be lost.

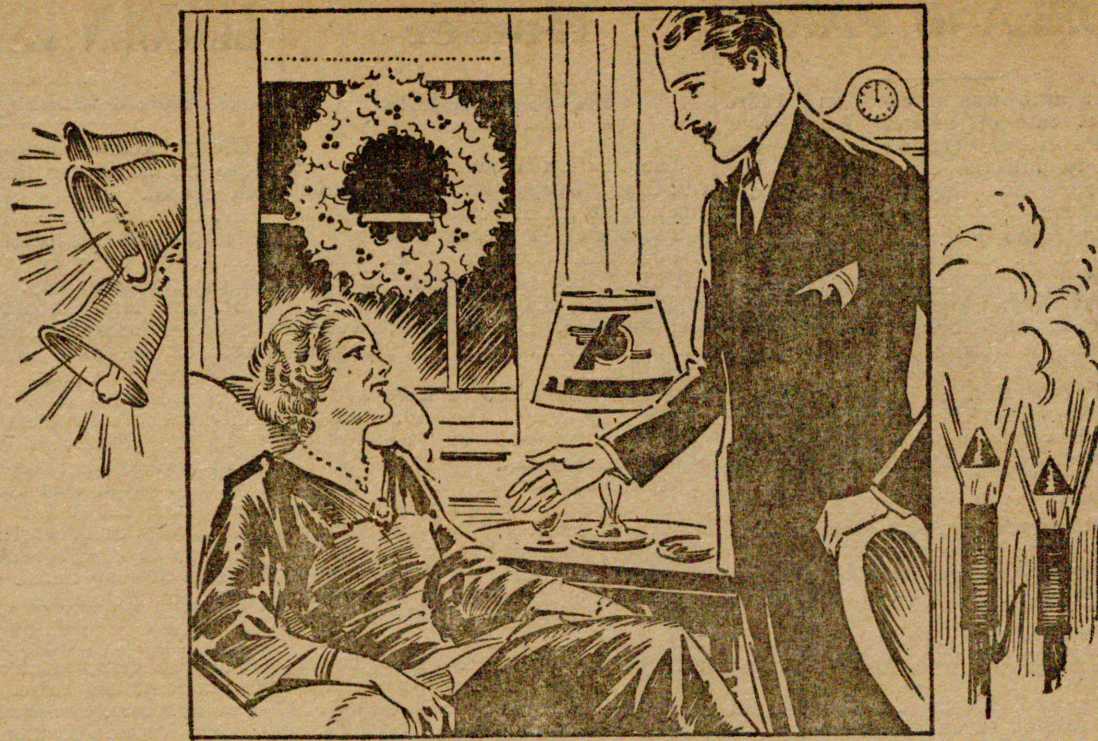

Whether you are canning vegetables or fruits, be sure that you select fresh, firm products in excellent condition. Cleanliness is another item of paramount importance. In canning vegetables first scrub them thoroughly in running water if possible, then prepare them as for table use and cook them immediately. When completely heated to the boiling point, put in clean hot jars and seal tightly.

Not all vegetables are attractive when canned; corn is one of the comparatively few which is popular in canned form as well as when fresh. A can of corn is one of the most convenient things a housewife can have on hand, for by adding to it milk, cheese or egg, she can create a complete meal in one dish.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

MIDNIGHT, December 31, 1934! The bells burst forth into a joyful clangor. The sirens shriek and the whistles scream. At many gay night parties everyone drinks a toast to the New Year. But, more quietly, at home many couples turn to each other soberly and ejaculate with heartfelt fervor: "A happy New Year to you, my dear!"

What will the New Year bring forth? Well, for one thing, it will bring forth ten hundred and ninety-five meals, if you are fortunate. Did we hear some housewives sigh? Perhaps they don't consider themselves so fortunate to have to plan ten hundred and ninety-five meals!

That is the reason why we are going to try to lighten their burden by printing some succulent recipes which should give them a good start toward solving this perplexing problem. There are only a certain number of foods, after all. But of the tempting combinations of them there are no end.

Some Winter Soups

A good, hot, sustaining soup is fine winter provender. So here are recipes for a couple to start with. The first is for that good, old American standby

New England Clam Chowder: Dice one-eight pound salt pork, and sauté with one medium sized sliced onion. Add one and a half cups diced potatoes, sauté a few minutes, and then add one-half teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper, a pinch of thyme, one-eighth teaspoon celery seed, two tablespoons chili sauce and one cup water. Add the chopped clams from a small can containing one cup of clams and three-fourths of a cup of liquor, and one tablespoon flour smothered with two cups cold milk, and stir until slightly thickened. Add the clam liquor last so that there will be no danger of its curdling the milk. Serve with plain crackers or pilot crackers. Serves four.

Or if you prefer a lighter soup to start a dinner, try this Tomato Bouillon with Mushrooms: Stew for five minutes the contents of a one quart can of tomatoes, two cups water, liquor from one can mushrooms, one and one-fourth teaspoons salt and one teaspoon paprika. Add two bouillon cubes, dissolve them, then strain mixture. Add two slightly-beaten egg whites and two crushed egg shells. Boil one minute. Let stand half an hour to settle, then strain through a double cheese cloth. Add one-half cup chopped mushrooms sautéed in two tablespoons butter, and reheat but do not boil. Serves eight.

Sustaining Salads

And here's a succulent and sustaining salad that you can serve at a buffet supper.

Turkey, Sweetbread and Pineapple Salad: Toss lightly together, with mayonnaise to moisten slightly, one cup cold, diced turkey, one cup cold, diced sweetbreads, one-half cup white grapes, skinned and seeded, one-half cup diced canned Hawaiian pineapple and salt and pepper to taste. Pile on a large chop plate or in a big salad bowl, well garnished with lettuce. Serve from buffet table. Serves eight.

To make a salad the main course of a meal, it should contain plenty of proteins. Here's one that does and tastes delicious.

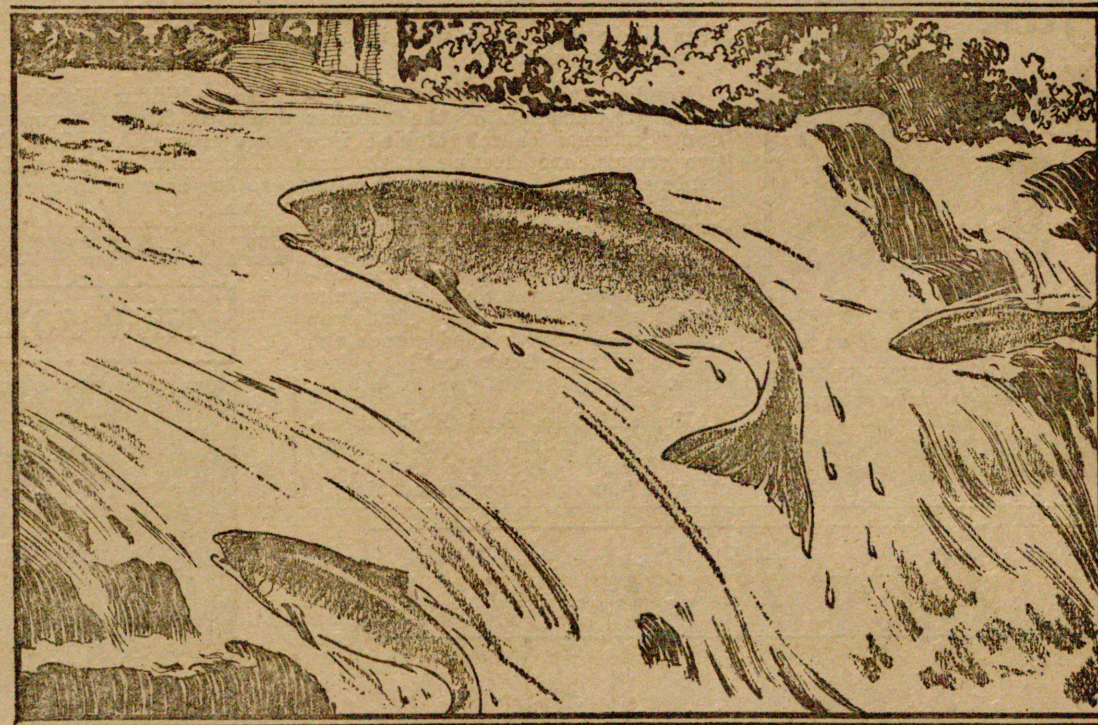

Meat and Cucumber Mold: Soften one tablespoon gelatin in two tablespoons cold water and dissolve in one cup boiling canned tomato juice. Add one teaspoon lemon juice and salt and pepper to taste. When cool and beginning to thicken, add one-half cup mayonnaise, two cups finely cut meat, one cup diced cucumbers and two tablespoons chopped pickle relish. The meat may be one cup ham plus one cup chicken (the contents of a 6-ounce can), or equal quantities of chicken and veal, ham and veal or any such combination. Pour into wet oblong mold, and chill. Turn out on platter, and garnish as desired. Serve in slices. Serves eight.

A Winter Dessert

A nice warming dessert to end a meal with in winter is the following

Steamed Oatmeal Pudding: Mix together one cup uncooked oatmeal, half the contents of a 1-pound can mincemeat, three tablespoons corn syrup, one-fourth teaspoon salt and two-thirds cup milk, and let stand about an hour. Add one tablespoon melted butter, one-half teaspoon soda dissolved in a little hot water, two tablespoons dry crumbs mixed with one teaspoon baking powder and two well-beaten eggs. Pour into buttered pudding dish and steam one and a half hours. Serve hot with hard sauce. Serves six.*

A Favorite For Centuries

FEW foods have enjoyed the popularity over a course of centuries that a certain delicious fish has maintained. When Julius Caesar marched his victorious legions through Gaul, about the year 56 B.C., his warriors saw a silver horde of glistening fish which leaped and jumped in the sunlight, and bathed their way against the current of the river Garonne. This kind of fish was new to the Romans who named it Salmo, probably from the Latin word salire which means "to leap." And it is known as salmon to this day.

This delicious fish soon found its way to the tables of the epicures of Rome. In 77 A.D. Pliny writes: "In Aquitania the river salmon is preferred to all the fish that swim in the sea." About four hundred years later Decimus Magnus Ausonius lauded salmon as "a fit dish for feasts where choice is difficult," and the literature of Ireland, England, Scotland and Wales is filled with references to salmon.

Always Remained Popular

When the early settlers came to America they found salmon in vast numbers in the rivers of New York and New England, and they were the staple food of the coastal Indians both East and West. More than four hundred years later, the late Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, universally known as "the father of the pure foods law," who was for thirty years Chief of the United States Bureau of Chemistry, said: "For children over six canned salmon is the cheapest and most nutritious animal food that can be had."

In the meanwhile salmon had continued to be one of the most popular of foods more because of its delicious taste than because it has become cheap and is always nutritious. From small beginnings back in 1864 the industry of canning salmon had grown to a pack of more than four hundred million cans a year. So now we can all eat this great delicacy at small expense.

The next question is how to eat it. It is now served in many ways, but in which of these ways does it taste best? Well, that's a matter of individual preference. The only way to solve it is to try some of the ways and see which you like best. So here are some recipes for its use.

In a Salad and Soup

Salmon Mayonnaise: Chill a 1-pound can of salmon in the ice box for several hours or, better, overnight. Remove from can, sliding out carefully onto a platter. Cover with one-half cup mayonnaise and garnish with eight pickle fans. Serves four liberally.

Salmon and Tomato Bisque: Turn the contents of a 1-pound can of salmon, including liquor, into a stew pan, and add the contents of a 15-ounce can of tomatoes, one bay leaf, one sliced onion, one-fourth teaspoon peppercorns and one cup water, and stew gently for about fifteen minutes. Press through a coarse sieve. Reheat and add a pinch of soda and pour slowly into a hot white sauce made of four tablespoons butter, four tablespoons flour and two and a half cups milk. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Serves six.

In Pies and Puffs

Seaman's Pie: Sauté one small onion in two tablespoons butter a few minutes, then slowly add one and a half tablespoons flour and one cup milk, making a white sauce. Put alternate layers of salmon from a half pound can and mushrooms from a 4-ounce can in a buttered baking dish, and pour sauce over. Meanwhile four potatoes should be boiled, drained, mashed and seasoned with two tablespoons butter, four tablespoons hot milk and salt and pepper, and then piled lightly on top of the fish mixture. Bake in hot oven till brown. Serves six to eight.

Salmon Puffs with Hollandaise Sauce: Beat sixteen eggs well, add two quarts milk and the flaked salmon from four 1-pound cans. Add two quarts soft bread crumbs, four teaspoons salt, paprika and nutmeg to taste, and turn into well-greased molds, each of which has a slice of hard-cooked egg in the bottom. Set molds in hot water and bake in a slow oven—300 degrees—for forty to fifty minutes or till set and a knife comes out clean. Turn onto plates and garnish with Hollandaise sauce and a bit of watercress. Serves fifty. May also be served with cream sauce or tomato sauce.*

Chief Job of Railroads Is Best Possible Service

By L. A. DOWNS
President, Illinois Central System

In these times, as always, the chief job of the railroads is to provide the best possible service. Notable improvements have been made in the service of the Illinois Central System.

On the passenger side, a streamlined train has been ordered for operation between St. Louis and Chicago on a schedule of less than five hours; a new Panama Limited has been placed in service between Chicago and New Orleans on a 20-hour schedule; coaches have been rebuilt to modern design; dining and lounge cars have been remodeled; and a start has been made on the air-conditioning of approximately 100 sleeping, parlor, dining and lounge cars.

On the freight side, further reductions have been made in train schedules, saving a full day in some cases; both evening and morning arrivals and departures have been provided at principal terminals; roundly 350 locomotives and 12,500 freight cars have been overhauled and renewed; eleven Diesel locomotives have been ordered for switching and transfer work on the Chicago terminal; the handling of package freight in express service at freight rates has been begun; and other experiments in improved service have been undertaken.

These several improvements in freight and passenger service are additional to the progress made in roadway improvements, which during the year included the renewal of more than 100 miles of main-line track; the rebuilding of approaches of the bridge over the Ohio river at Cairo, Ill.; the renewal of a bridge at Big Clifty, Ky.; the relining of a tunnel on the Edge wood line at Reevesville, Ill.; and the building of bridges over the Bonnet Carre floodway north of New Orleans.

All this work, through purchases of durable goods and relief of unemployment, has contributed in a large way to the national recovery program. Its greater contribution to the public welfare, however, has been through the improvement of transportation, that service which gives value to the products of mines and factories and fields—which makes the things that are produced anywhere in the country available in every other part of it.

It is admitted by all that railroads are indispensable. The efforts of the Illinois Central System and other railroads have been to make them so indispensable that the public can not get along without them.

Uniform Personal Property Assessment Stressed In Cook Co.

The following statement by John S. Clark, Assessor of Cook County relative to personal property assessments, is of vital importance at this time and should be carefully read and considered:

"As Assessor of Cook County one of my deepest concerns is to make a personal property assessment uniform and fair to all.

"Assessment of real estate has its problems but they are trivial in comparison with the assessment of personal property. The personal property tax for the average man and woman is their only direct contact with their governments, and the most frequent criticism of assessments has been that the tax burden bears most heavily on the small owner.

"So far as is in my power to prevent, that criticism shall not apply to the assessment of Cook County citizens. I must and will obey the law in the assessment of all property, but it will be my constant endeavor to obey the law in a spirit of fairness to the little fellow against whom the great bulk of the tax bills run, the average man whose visible wealth, and indeed his only wealth, is composed of household goods and a few personal effects.

"It has been and is my firm conviction that in all fairness household furniture and similar belongings should be exempt from assessment and taxation up to a reasonable minimum. The constitution and the laws of the state, however, do not permit such exemption and my oath of office binds me to obey the law.

"Pending a change in the laws which will permit such reasonable exemption, a change toward which, with others, I am bending my energies, my deepest concern is to make an assessment which will be as fair and just to the man of little means as to the corporation or individual of great wealth.

"As a matter of fact the assessment of household furniture, the principal possession of the great majority of the people, has its own peculiar problems. The assessor may exercise his judgment, but each individual owner is in far better position to state the real value of his belongings.

"In the interest of uniformity, which is the final test of an assessment, I have formulated a series of general standards and guides to be considered in determining the value of items of personal property listed on the assessment schedule. These are not hard and fast rules but are in the nature of yard sticks by which the value of the various articles may be measured with the greatest degree of uniformity.

"The guide for valuing household furniture and furnishings, Item No. 7 on the assessment schedule, is designed solely for the purpose of promoting uniformity and fairness in the assessment of that type of property.

"This guide, which is printed on the information sheet accompanying each schedule, places a reasonable depreciation for household possessions at not to exceed forty per cent for the first year after purchase, ten per cent for each of the second and third years ownership, and five per cent for each of the next five years, with the provision that the owner's final valuation should not be less than the fair cash value at a voluntary sale.

"On this basis the large depreciation which follows the purchase of any article is recognized and allowance is made for the wear and tear of years of use. Through the general use of this guide to value, uniformity can be achieved, and I earnestly urge that every household in the county take this guide into consideration in filling out his personal property schedule.

"From my contacts, through the years, with the people of Cook County I am firm in the belief that every good citizen will be eager to recognize his duty to the government by paying a tax, provided he is convinced that the assessment on which the tax is based is uniform, fair and without discrimination. I am equally certain that lack of uniformity is the surest road to dissatisfaction and downright refusal to recognize any and all tax bills."

MOKENA

The M. E. Ladies Aid will meet on Thursday afternoon January 10 at 2 o'clock in the home of Mrs. Ona E. McGovney. Following the meeting a luncheon will be served. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bechstein spent New Year's eve and New Year's Day with relatives and friends in Chicago.

Mrs. J. V. Hall and daughter Eleanor spent New Year's day in Chicago with relatives.

Mrs. Wm. Evitt who has been ill with the flu is able to be out again. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Meyer attended a New Year celebration in Joliet Monday night.

Henry Schweser slipped on an icy walk at his home Sunday and dislocated his collar bone. He was taken to the Silver Cross hospital in Joliet by Dr. E. G. McMahon and returned home the forepart of the week.

A New Year party and dance was held at Morry's Tavern Monday night. A turkey and duck plate dinner was served. An orchestra from Joliet furnished the music.

Mrs. Kate Cooper who has been visiting in Lincoln, Nebraska with her daughter Cora Gorham and family since last fall, has returned home.

Miss Celia Cooper of Chicago is visiting with Mokena relatives.

Mrs. George Meyer of Coopers Grove visited with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Adam Barenz, Sunday.

Byron Nelson and Tom Moore who have been appointed deputy sheriffs, were busy this week serving jury summonses.

Mrs. Henry Miller who has been quite ill with bronchial pneumonia, is much improved.

Charles Burkhardt and Fred Rauch who have been ill with the flu, are improving nicely.

George Knudson has been summoned as a juror for the January grand jury.

The Mokena public school opened Wednesday morning after being closed over the holidays.

The village board will meet next Tuesday night in regular monthly session.

Mrs. August Werner sprained her ankle while clerking at the Wannemacher store Monday.

Mrs. George F. Wannemacher is on the sick list.

The annual stockholders meeting and election of officers of the Mokena State Bank will be held on January ninth.

AND MORE TO COME

The Washington Santa Claus has handed out about eight billion dollars in less than two years as follows:

Relief, two billion dollars; RFC, six hundred thirty-two million; PWA five hundred million; Farm Adjustment Administration five hundred seventy-three million; Farm Credit Administration one billion, eight hundred twenty-seven million; HOLC two billion fifty eight million; CCC three hundred seventy-two million. This makes a grand total of $7,963,000,000.

Had this vast sum been spent through regular business channels it would have helped recovery, but the manner in which it was handled has put on increased number of people on relief rolls.

Titillating Tomatoes

TOMATOES are fine. They're a savory, rich red vegetable, served alone or as an addition to all sorts of dishes. But have you ever thought of serving tomatoes as the main part of a dish and making the other ingredients the addition? Take, for instance, this

Tomato Broth with Asparagus

Tips: Simmer gently for fifteen minutes the contents of a large can of tomatoes, one slice onion, one-fourth teaspoon peppercorns, one-fourth teaspoon salt and one-half teaspoon sugar. Then press through a sieve. Add two and a half cups chicken stock, or two and a half cups water with one chicken bouillon cube, the liquor from a No. 1 can asparagus tips and the tips cut in pieces. Heat to boiling and serve. Serves eight.

The tomatoes are the main thing in this soup, but the asparagus tips are what make it titillatingly new and appetizing.

A Perfect Purée

And here's another soup, with tomatoes as its base, which the other ingredients help to blend into a perfect purée.

Tomato and Cauliflower Purée:

Cook one medium head cauliflower until tender, and then press through a sieve. Press the contents of a No. 2 can of tomatoes through a sieve also, and add with the contents of one can consommé and one cup water to the cauliflower, and bring to boiling. Sauté one tablespoon minced onion in two tablespoons fat for a few minutes, add three tablespoons flour, stir smooth, thin with a little of the hot soup, and then add to the soup, and cook until creamy. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Serves six.

CHARMING QUILT IS "SUN BONNET"

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

Many mothers and grandmothers would get busy and make the "Sun Bonnet" quilt for a home darling if they could see just how cunning it looks when finished. One of the six poses of the baby is shown here. The 18 inch blocks are stamped on white material. The applique patches are stamped for cutting and sewing on many colored beautiful prints. The embroidery is in simple outline stitch.

Send 15c to our quilt department and we will mail you one complete block like the above picture, also picture of quilt showing the six different blocks. Make this one block up and see how it looks when finished. Six blocks, each different, will be mailed for 75c postpaid.

This is another of our good-looking quilts and, like the others, must be worked up to be appreciated.

SYNOPSIS

Prudence Schuyler comes to Prosperity Farm to make a new life for herself and her brother, David, his health broken by tragedy. The second day Prue falls from the barn loft into the arms of Rodney Gerard, rich young man, a neighbor. There is at once a mutual attraction, but Prudence suspects men since her sister's husband ran away with her brother's wife, Len Calloway tries to buy Prue's timber, but she contracts with Rod to dispose of the trees. David comes to the farm. Prue accompanies Rod and Jean, Rod's thirteen-year-old niece, to a circus. Chisot, an old clown, is accidentally killed. He was the grandfather of Milly Gooch, one of the circus riders. Rod became friendly with Milly when she lived on Prosperity Farm. Calloway intimidates laborers so that they cannot be hired to cut the timber for Rodney Gerard. After Chisot's death Rod calls on Milly to see if he can be of any help. Prue sees in a newspaper a flashlight picture of him with Milly. Rodney goes to New York for timber cutters, taking David with him to help select men from among the Rescue Mission hangers-on. Rod sends word of his coming, with a crew of laborers. To keep the knowledge of the workers' arrival from Calloway, Prudence enters her timber tract with him on the pretense of bargaining on the lumbering. He confines her in a cabin. An escaped convict appears and robs Prudence of her pearls. Then Rod arrives and holds a gun on Calloway and the convict, recovering the jewels.

If he spoke to her again in that unsteady voice, she would cry her heart out on his shoulder, then where would she be?

"Warmer—but—a roaring fire and a cup of hot tea will seem like heaven. Jim will—"

"Jim! Jim! You think of him every minute. Why don't you marry him?"

Prudence shut her eyes. She had been about to say that Jim would think him lost. He had handed her a weapon of defense. She rushed to her own destruction.

"I have had that idea myself—in fact it is quite settled."

The words seemed to twang in the air long after they were spoken, to vibrate like a violin string which had been roughly struck. What a lie! What an outrageous lie! She had stripped off honor and truth in a determination to protect herself from future heartache. What would Jim Armstrong say if he knew? He mustn't know. After what seemed hours of time and miles of road, she begged in what she recognized as absurd anticlimax.

"Please don't mention what I told you to anyone—even David. We—we don't want it known—at present. I—I—well, you made me angry and—and I just flung it at you."

"Don't worry. I shan't broadcast the good news. You are hoarse. Still chilly?"

"I'm warmer, but thank heaven, we are almost home! There's the red brick house!"

"David and I had planned for you to dine at High Ledges tonight—he wanted to tell you of our experiences—but if you've taken cold—"

"I never take cold. As soon as I get off these wet clothes I'll be all right." How could she face Jim Armstrong, she wondered.

He lifted her out of the roadster and pulled off the robe. "You're shivering. There isn't a light in the house. Where is Jane Mack?"

"Having t-tea with Mrs. S-Si, probably."

"You're shivering again. Come on! I'm going in with you!"

"No! No! Go home! I don't need anyone."

"Sez you! Come on!" He laid a compelling arm about her shoulders and drew her along the path. The knob of the front door turned under his hand. He followed her into the living room which was faintly lighted by blinking coals on the hearth.

"Sit in that wing chair. Don't try to talk."

He flung pine cones from the big copper kettle beside the fireplace on the embers. They blazed. Carefully he laid birch kindling; when that caught he piled on large logs and lighted the lamp.

Prudence protested hoarsely: "Please don't do anything more. I can take care of myself."

"Got a heater in the house? Is your room warm?"

"My own room upstairs? Only when I have a fire in the stove."

"Then I'll get your dry clothes, you can't stay in those wet things, and you are not going up to that cold room to change. Stick out your foot."

He dropped to one knee and unlaced the boot she automatically held out. For an instant she was dumb from surprise, but only for an instant.

"Rodney Gerard, don't dare go to my room."

"Did you say 'dare'? I'm going under the Trading with the Enemy act. It's being used this year."

He carefully removed the other boot, placed the pair side by side on the hearth, and crossed the room.

Huddled in the wing chair, she regarded him as he returned. Green crepe pajamas hung over one arm, her flannel house coat striped in blue and green over the other. How had he known what to bring?

"Here you are! Get out of those wet things and into these."

He drew a chair in front of the fire and laid the garments over its back. Prudence regarded him with a superior smile, as superior as a smile could be with chattering teeth behind it.

"Just naturally helpful, aren't you? I haven't the slightest intention of changing. I'll stay here until M-Macky gets back."

"You have another guess coming to you. You'll change to dry clothes while I'm in the kitchen making a cup of hot tea. Now get this. If you haven't when I come back, I'll peel off those wet things myself." He paused on the threshold. "Make it snappy. It doesn't take long to boil water."

Prudence wrinkled her nose at his back. The act of defiance precipitated a body-wrenching sneeze. Let him try to make her change. Just let him try.

She glanced furtively at the pajamas and coat over the chair. They looked blissfully warm, and she was frozen. Why not put them on? Why freeze for the pleasure of defying Rodney Gerard?

What was that sound? Was he coming already? With shaking hands she pulled off the green cardigan. Of course, the lordly male would think he had frightened her into obedience. She knotted the cord of the green and blue house coat. He hadn't. It wasn't that she was too proud to fight—was her reaction to that thought a chuckle or a shiver—she was too cold to fight. Silly not to have put these toasty warm things on at once.

He was coming! She caught up the wet clothing and jammed it into the wood box. Back in the wing chair she thrust her bare toes, still white from cold, into sandals and sat on them.

When Gerard entered he glanced quickly at the chair in front of the fire. He drew forward a Chinese teapoy and set down the tray in his hand.

"There you are!"

He poured tea, strong enough to curl the straightest lashes up tight, and passed her the cup.

"Drink it while it's hot."

She took a hasty swallow.

"It's boiling! You—haven't a c-copper-lined mouth up your sleeve, have you? You're such an efficient p-person."

"Did it burn?"

"Oh no, it froze and frosted all the way down."

"Don't try to be funny. Drink it. At least, you're not shivering now. What the dickens have you done to this room?"

"Paper and paint. I wanted it fresh for David when he returned." She started to her feet. "Dave! How could I have forgotten? He must be wild with anxiety about me."

"Sit down! Finish that tea! I phoned him from upstairs. Told him that you were okay and that you would be at High Ledges for dinner. I—"

A door banged. "Who's that? Sit still!"

Before he could reach the hall, Jane Mack appeared on the threshold.

"Miss Prue! Miss Prue! They've caught the escaped prisoner! Now perhaps you'll get your jewels." She took a step into the room and pulled down her spectacles. "What's the matter, child? What happened to her, Mr. Rodney?"

Prue reassured quickly:

"Nothing happened, Macky, except that I went to look at my timber and got wet. Mr. Gerard made some tea and—here we are."

Jane Mack put her hand against Prue's cheek. "You look feverish. Sure you haven't taken cold?"

"Of course not. I never have a cold. What did you hear about the convict, Macky? Tell us, quick."

Gerard lifted the heavy coat from Jane's thin shoulders—Prue wondered if that attention ever had been shown her before—and drew forward a chair.

"Sit here, Miss Mack. How did you hear about the capture?"

"The news was broadcast about ten minutes ago. The convict was brought to the county jail by a leading citizen—didn't tell his name over the radio—who caught him in the woods, dared death from the desperado's revolver, and captured him single-handed."

Jane Mack's theatrical "dared death" unleashed Prue's shivers.

"Single-handed!" she echoed.

The leading citizen was Calloway, of course. Evidently he had forgotten to mention Rodney Gerard's timely entrance at the cabin, had forgotten her masterly stroke with the ax.

"Single-handed!" she repeated, and looked at Rodney Gerard. He shook his head as his eyes met hers. She turned to Jane Mack.

"So the leading citizen caught him single-handed. Ain't human nature grand!"

CHAPTER X

Perched on a stump among others which reminded her of Henry Hudson's goblin crew in the forest set of Rip Van Winkle, Prudence listened to the warning call "Timber!" before the crash of a tree; to the clop of axes, the rasp of saws that shattered the brooding silence of the woods. Was it only two weeks since Rodney Gerard and David had personally conducted their crew from New York? Probably it seemed months to the men, who, unused to hard work, had been instructed gradually in the art of handling and grinding axes, twisting peaveys, and pulling on cross-saws.

If it didn't seem long to them, it seemed an aeon or two to her since that cabin adventure of recent and thrilling memory. The convict was safe behind bars, but hadn't a man quite as dangerous to the Schuyler and Gerard interests been left at large? Had Calloway given up the fight to stop them from cutting the timber? She couldn't believe it.

Two weeks since they had arrived, and this was the first time she had seen them at work. Absorption in work and sports was not the only reason that had kept her from the logging belt, Prue acknowledged to herself with heightened color, she didn't care to meet Rodney Gerard, and she couldn't face Jim Armstrong. Of course, he didn't know of her absurd statement that she was engaged to him, but until she felt less ashamed of herself she would keep out of his way. She must have been dazed with cold and excitement that day to have fabricated such a story.

She shook off the past, filled her lungs with the sparkling air and her eyes with the present. They glowed with laughter as she watched the men she could see. They were a motley lot, in shirts of a hectic plaid and baggy corduroy trousers. They were bare of arm and throat. They had lost the unemployed slouch, were clear-eyed and hard of muscle. They seemed happy and clean.

She blinked away sudden tears of gratitude as her brother appeared between the snowy trees. It seemed incredible that the erect, vigorous man in army breeches, high boots, and heavy sweater was the same person whom she and Gerard had tenderly assisted from the black roadster not so many weeks ago.

"Lengthening roads that wind through dust and heat to hilltops clear," she repeated softly.

The men from the mission were making good, Prudence approved, as she watched them. Gerard, Armstrong, and St Puffer were each directing a crew. Twenty of the original importation of twenty-five had stuck. Three had sneaked away after their first day at hard labor; two had deserted to Calloway.

Calloway! The repetition of the name brought Prue's doubts of the man's acceptance of the present situation crowding back into her mind. Had he given up the fight? She couldn't believe it. He was too resourceful, too relentless. If only she could think of the devastating things to say when she faced him that were thronging on the tip of her tongue now.

"Warm enough, Prue?"

Her brother's voice startled her back from an imaginary verbal battle with Calloway.

"Warm! I'm fairly wadded. What Macky didn't suggest as a cold-protector, Mrs. St did. How are the men getting on?"

"Great. I knew they would make good. They are not fools. Never in their lives have they had such food nor such consideration. As a financial proposition this experiment of Gerard's is likely to prove costly; as an experiment in human values I believe that it will pay a dividend."

"They look happy and fat in spite of their hard work."

"Fat! You said something then. They eat enormously, and they sleep like logs on the balsam boughs under their blankets. Even the hard work won't take care of the energy they are storing up. All their noise and geying is good-natured now; but let one of them get ugly or just one drink, and victors jubilating about goal posts would be a Sleepy Hollow compared to the inside of that cattle barn."

"Can they get a drink, Dave?"

"Not unless they walk miles for it, and by the time they have tramped back to the bunk-house at the end of their work day they've had all the walking they care for. They are happy enough, with a radio and one of those small moving picture machines—but, in spite of that, I can't explain it, I feel a pricking in my thumbs."

"Have you heard from the two whom Calloway subtracted?"

"Not since the night they appeared at the bunkhouse to make a neighborly call. On that occasion they were greeted with such a storm of abuse and such a fusillade of missiles that the place looked as if it had been the storm center of a five-and-ten store explosion. They won't try that again. Here comes Rod."

Rodney Gerard leaned against a small tree and regarded Prudence with smiling aloofness.

"We have with us today—Prue of Prosperity farm. What do you think of our logging enterprise, partner?"

She gripped the stump with both gloved hands. A small cold tremor of fear quivered through her. He hadn't moved, yet she felt as if irresistibly she were being drawn into his arms. Why, why did it have to be he who set her heart thumping, whose eyes seemed to stop her breath? How could he in a few weeks have so possessed her? Magic? Black art? Almost she began to believe in them. Why couldn't it have been Jim Armstrong, who had had neither time nor money to finance circus riders?

She kept her eyes on her brother as hands deep in the pockets of his heavy sweater he walked away. She said unevenly:

"David is unbelievably better, isn't he?"

"Better! He's pretty nearly okay. When we were in New York, I persuaded him to see a specialist I know. He said that if your brother would keep out of blankety-blank—I am giving you a carefully expurgated version of his opinion—places full of dead air and live in the country for a time, that nature, who is the greater repair specialist in creation, would have him on his feet in—"

"Timber!"

Gerard jumped to his feet at the warning call. Prue's eyes followed his. The men had taken to the cover of big trees. All except one. Why—why didn't the stupid creature—

"Hi! O'Shea! Look out!"

Gerard yelled the warning as he dashed toward the red-headed giant.

Prudence clutched her hands over her heart. Would he be in time? Didn't Rodney realize his own danger when he hurled himself at the man? The tree was down! So were the two men. Crushed? The crew dropped their axes and rushed forward.

She shut her eyes for an instant. When she opened them, Gerard was on his feet with his hand on O'Shea's shoulder.

"Sorry to treat you rough, Shance. You had to take the chance of being knocked out by the tree or by me."

The dazed man blinked small red eyes at the prostrate forest monster—harmless now—which had cleared him by an inch.

Ants Outdo Man in Many Demonstrations of Skill

With well trained soldiers, skillful builders, successful farmers, and able rulers many of the ant nations challenge some of man's most outstanding accomplishments, says Pathfinder Magazine. These wonderfully organized tribes perform wonders which are hard to understand. They pursue methods remarkably similar to those of man. Their formations in war show a perfection which is not only similar to but rivals that of the world's best armies. Working tirelessly some of them, instead of hunting all of their food, actually produce part of it themselves. Certain varieties of mushrooms have been domesticated by them and are grown in underground beds receiving careful cultivation and watering.

Most striking of all is their building. Some of the tower-like structures ants erect would far outstrip those of man if they were considered in view of the comparative sizes of the builders. Some of the buildings reach a height of 20 feet and withstand severe storms remarkably well. Workers in the tribes are aided by slaves captured in wars.

Undersecretary of State

The undersecretary of state is the principal assistant of the secretary of state in the discharge of his various functions, aiding in the formulation and execution of the foreign policies of the government, in the reception of representatives of foreign governments, etc. In matters which do not require the personal attention of the secretary of state he acts for the secretary of state, and in the absence of that official he becomes acting secretary of state. His duties also include general direction of the work of the Department of State and of the foreign service.

CAP AND BELLS

PROMISING

Mr. and Mrs. Penley were honest, hard-working farmer folks. By self-denial they had managed to send their son to Harvard. One day a letter arrived. "I know you will be pleased," wrote the son, "to learn that I have won the squash championship."

"Well, well!" beamed Father Penley. "We'll make a farmer out of that boy yet, mother."

Diagnosed

"Doctor," said the pest who always was trying to get free medical advice. "I have the queerest noises in my head; what do you suppose causes it?"

"Maybe the wheels in there need oiling," he snapped.

'Twas Ever Thus

"You look worried. What's the matter?"

"Ding it, my doctor just told me I've got to quit worrying or else."

She Was Willing

Curate (admiring a bowl of bulbs).—How lovely to think it will soon be opening time, Mrs. Bird.

Mrs. Binks—Well, now, and whoever would have thought of you saying a thing like that! But I'm game to pop out for a quick one if you feel like it.—London Tit-Bits.

Not What They Ought to Be

"Would you like some pickles?" said Marjorie's aunt, who had asked her to luncheon.

"No," said Marjorie.

"But these are sweet ones," replied auntie.

"But I don't like sweet things that ought to be sour," Marjorie insisted.

Case of Necessity

"What was the inspiration for your success?" the rich man was asked.

"Well, frankly," he grinned, "it was the meals my wife cooked when we were first married. I realized right off I'd have to earn enough to hire a cook if I didn't want to die of indigestion."

SLUSH FUND, OF COURSE

City Official—Where are we to get the money for cleaning the streets after these heavy snows?

Assistant—Out of the slush fund, of course.

Woof! Woof!

"This is a retail store, isn't it," asked the old lady.

"Certainly, madam," said the clerk.

"Well," said she, "some friends gave my grandson this pup, and it has had its tail cut off and I want it retailed, please."

Dumb-Bell

He—I've just been reading some statistics. Do you know that every time my watch ticks, a man dies.

She—For goodness sake, let it run down.—Royal Arcanum Bulletin.

Did He Get the Job?

Employer—Personal appearance is a helpful factor in business success.

Employee—Yes, and business success is a helpful factor in personal appearance.

The Answer to That One

"Were you ever kissed?" the old maid was asked.

"Well, if I should die tomorrow it would not be from curiosity," she replied.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Good Reason

Visitor—Will you marry me right away?

Girl—W-w-w-why—I-I scarcely know you!

Visitor—That's why I want you to marry me right away.

PATTERN 9168

What could be more cunning than this square little dress for a round little girl? And by the way, squares are "just the thing" this year. The yokes, back and front, give the impression of buttoning down over the top of the box pleats. The neck and sleeves are trimmed with demure little collar and cuffs of contrasting material. This model includes a pattern for matching bloomers. Made in a bright gay woolen for colder weather—either plaids or checks are very smart—or in a pretty gingham, for warmer days, it will appeal to the heart of the most clothes-conscious young miss.

Pattern 9168 may be ordered only in sizes 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10. Size 4 requires 2 yards 36 inch fabric and 3/4 yard contrasting.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighth Street, New York, N. Y.

NO JOKE

"Well," the recent bride was asked, "what have you learned since you became a man's meal getter?"

"That there are a lot of things about it besides onion to bring tears to the eyes," she sighed.

Hm-m!

"That certainly is a freak publicity stunt of Judge Bart's!"

"What's that?"

"Well, the paper states that he wouldn't sit again for a month."

Lofty Assumptions

"You have been getting some bad advice in business."

"I have," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "I had a highbrow group of advisers. But highbrows are always suspected of high-hat inclinations."

Instead of a brain trust I got merely a brain crust."

CAUSE FOR TEARS

"Why did you weep at old Moneybags' funeral this morning? He's no relative of yours."

"No—that's why I wept."

Equality for All

Friend—How's the boy since he came back from college?

Man—Fine! Still treats us as equals.

How Health Affects School Child's Scholarship and Behavior

By FRANCES BERKELEY FLOORE
Director of Dietetics, St. Luke's Hospital

WISE parents recognize that their children's health is more important than an unbroken attendance record at school or the best "marks" in the room. These parents are doubly wise, for if children achieve health first, they are much more likely to have the good grades, too.

It has been shown that when the physical health of young students is improved through better diet and general health habits, class grades and school records tend also to be improved, because under-nutrition and poor health undermine the nervous stamina and make it impossible for the child to make a concentrated effort.

This idea of the relation between health and mental alertness is not new. The ancient Greeks and Romans believed that a strong active mind developed only in a vigorous, healthy body.

Children's behavior and reactions as well as their scholastic attainments are apt to improve with improved health. For example, when a test was made of the results of just one improved health habit—milk drinking in the morning at school—about fifty per cent of the children were found to have improved 25% or more in three respects. They became less easily fatigued; were more even tempered; and were less uncommunicative.

Incidentally, the fact that these studies were carried out with children who did not show the usual evidences of malnutrition gives additional evidence that for developing the greatest health and efficiency, all children should have an abundance of milk.

Numerous other experiments show the close connection between physical and mental health. Among German school children a general lowering in the quality of the school work

Prescription Service

Prompt service frequently is of more importance in sickness than the kind of remedy administered. In many cases the physician may prescribe any one of two or three different medicines and get equally good results, but nothing takes the place of promptness in an emergency.

Our prescription department specializes in sending to the bedside without any delay the medicine ordered by the doctor.

If requested we will pick up the prescription or the doctor may read it to us over the phone.

It is our aim at all times to co-operate with the physician for the benefit of the patient.
